M2 AGECOM

The Master's in Communications Administration and Management degree has been designed to train the future managers of communication companies (audiovisual, printed press, new media, etc.) and of communication departments of large trade and service companies. It provides courses and seminars on major legal, economic, technical and managerial issues confronting the communications sector, which have direct operational effects on the different areas concerned (Internet, new online services, internal communications, marketing and development, etc.).

The course has a general syllabus in order to provide broad knowledge in communications which can be adapted and honed in the different sectors concerned.
